Corporate Transactional

Corporate Law is a broad practice that includes, among other areas, Corporate Governance, Mergers & Acquisitions, Securities Law, Capital Markets, Fund Formation, Banking and Commercial Law, Commercial Contracts, Technology Transactions, Emerging Companies and Venture Capital. It involves the legal characteristics of business organizations and their interaction with directors, officers, shareholders, consumers, other businesses, banks, and the state and federal government.

The Transactional Negotiation Team is one way in which students may obtain experience in deal-making. Team members are mentored by seasoned practitioners, who give them critical feedback.

Did You Know . . . ?

- Corporate practice involves strategic planning, counseling and problem solving, in addition to building substantive knowledge of corporate law.
- Successful corporate lawyers understand their clients' businesses and the industries in which their clients operate, not just the laws governing them.
- Corporate practice can touch upon other substantive areas such as estate planning (succession planning), tax and charitable giving, executive compensation, bankruptcy, intellectual property, real estate and banking law.
